

LAND ROVER - 110 DOUBLE CAB

Where the conditions call for uncompromising off-road ability the Land Rover Defender is the only real solution, because it's built to take seriously difficult terrain in its stride. It is also a very competent and capacious load carrier, thanks largely to its simple, boxy shape – it certainly offers a more secure and effective cargo area than any of its car-derived rivals here. Its robust nature derives from the rugged construction, which robs the Land Rover of the sort of creature comforts and refinement available from more mainstream vans, but even though its seating seems very basic the cab can provide very supportive and surprisingly comfortable accommodation for long drives. Not surprisingly for a truck that's essentially the utilitarian choice, there's still a very primitive look to the interior, but controls and switches are sensibly positioned and optional refinements like electric windows, central locking and air conditioning are available. The 2492cc, Td5 engine is a willing performer, proving reasonably economical in spite of the weight of the vehicle, with sensible service intervals helping to control maintenance costs. The Land Rover Defender's key advantage in a workhorse world is that it provides a platform from which a wide variety of commercial applications can be based – dropside pick-up, tipper, box body, recovery vehicle – giving it a natural versatility that few others can match.
